Perceived as a country that offers socio-economic opportunities and stability, Chile is considered a destination country for many refugees and migrants from Venezuela. Anticipating that irregular movements continue, particularly across the high-altitude and dangerous border between Colchane (Chile) and Pisiga (Bolivia), it is estimated that 569,109 refugees and migrants from Venezuela will be living in Chile by the end of 2024.

In February 2022, the Chilean government enacted a "Migration and Foreigners Law", which established a new migration system, and within which a new National Migration Service was established in March 2022. Under the new Migration and Foreigners Law, most residence permits must be requested and obtained from abroad. The law also establishes a complementary protection mechanism and a statelessness determination procedure, both of which will be subject to implementation procedures through the aforementioned National Committee on Migration Policy.

The Refugee and Migrants Needs Analysis (RMNA) highlighted significant differences between the needs of refugees and migrants from Venezuela that recently arrived in the country compared to those in-destination, living in Chile. Among recent arrivals to Chile, food (79 per cent), humanitarian transportation (27 per cent) and shelter (17 per cent) were the main needs reported by those surveyed. For those already living in Chile, protection (legal status and access to documentation), integration (access to formal labour market), health (lack of access to health services, including mental health services), and education (challenges relating to access to schools and to accessing social benefits, as well as discrimination) were the main needs identified by refugee and migrants interviewed.

RESPONSE PRIORITIES

In coordination with its 21 partners, complementing government initiatives, and with particular attention on the northern zone and the Metropolitan Region, the R4V response priorities are as follows:

- Improve and provide access to shelter and case management services to refugees and migrants recently arriving to Chile, particularly in the border region of Tarapacá.
- Support documentation and other protection services for the most vulnerable and those with specific needs, including children, adolescents, women, GBV survivors, people with disabilities, persons living with chronic diseases, elderly people, LGBTQI+ persons, and victims of human trafficking and smuggling, exploitation and abuse.
- Reduce barriers to socio-economic integration and ensure social cohesion by supporting refugees and migrants from Venezuela to access livelihood opportunities and decent work, either in the formal labour market or through entrepreneurship. Reducing xenophobia and discrimination will be key to advancing refugees' and migrants' self-resilience and contributing to their successful integration in Chile.
- Support and promote effective access to food in complementarity with the Chilean Government and local authorities' activities in transit sites.

R4V will also coordinate with the Government of Chile in its role as Pro Tempore Presidency of the Quito Process in 2023, which reflects reaffirmed commitment on behalf of the government to seeking longer-term solutions for refugees and migrants from Venezuela across the region.
